Even elusive and impetuous before Mangalpande there was a soldier who took up imprisoned the great Diwan arms against the British authority. That Jawamard poisoned the tongue to stop it threw a bold challenge to the East India Company, which was taking advantage of the Indians' weakness through cunning and intrigue." The armed revolt of Velu Thampi, the hero of Travancore, is a forgotten but glorious saga of Indian history. He made people aware of the threat of East India Company.

It created a fervent passion to challenge authority in a dormant population. Velu Thampi was born in a middleclass Nair family in South intervening in the internal Travancore. A hardy farmer's blood ran through his veins. making kings fight within each This son of earth did not want other became popular. As a to lose his freedom. Velu result of this British policy of Thampi was a brilliant genius. He was a connoisseur of people's questions. He was a principled man. He adopted erstwhile ruler of Travancore certain principles in life and adherence to these principles inspired him with strange courage and adventure. Every man in the kingdom knew that the king himself was like a puppet of this illusory society and that the real rulers of the kingdom were all these miscreants and omens. At this time, the East India Company had established its foothold in the south after the wars of Karnataka and Mysore. He began to dominate southern politics. The East India Company's policy of affairs of the states and divide and rule, money and territories were pouring into the company's pockets." "The entered into a compromise agreement with the East India Company. Accordingly, the of six lakh rupees annually to the company as consideration. anything extra beyond this would protect the state in case benefits of ready meals came to the British. He made it clear period. The king and his to the resident that the advisors took the easy way out and kept all the demands of the East India Company in check.""When Venu Thampi came to know about this warned the company that they incident, he reached were only traders and Travancore on a horse. It is therefore there was no need said that this heroic man to meddle in any state affairs changed horses on the way and rode for three consecutive Along with this, Velu Thampi days and reached Travancore. made it clear to the East India During these three days he did not put a single grain of food in his mouth. There was pain military force, that it was not in his heart. There was anger Leshma himself who was against the king who was afraid of war. In this way, Velu entrapped in the tricks of the British and allowed to the threatening demands of slavery. "After coming to the Travancore, he went directly responding to the East India to his taluk. Farmers were gathered together and given an idea of what is happening Dewan of the neighboring in the state and a procession of thousands of farmers reached the edge of Kadi Rajmahal. The king had to go out of the palace and have a of them decided to be well conversation with Velu Thampi. The king accepted all his demands. The first of these demands was to give permission to the cowardly, cowardly and corrupt advisers. Within a few months, Velu Thampi was Indian. It is said that Velu Thampi was very strict in Travancore should remain following the law. As a result of his strict rule and The East India Company clean administration, the revenue of the state increased established peace and order in the entire state. After this he took up the question of the company's demands were unfair and could not be accepted under any circumstances. He also other than doing business. Company, which had threatened the king with Thampi responded heroically company. " "After Company, Velu Thampi opened negotiations with the state of Cochin. At the end of the two talks, it was agreed that the British Company's authority must be ended. Both prepared to fight in case of war. The company now hardened its stance and started issuing threats of war.

fled and Velu Thampi's army emerged victorious in this battle. After this more Kumak of the company arrived. The British troops rushed in earlier than expected. Before Velu Thampi could make his front strong and bayonet, a large army was deployed." "The whole of Central Travancore was thrown up, but moral support alone could not stand before cannon and guns. During a crucial battle, Velu Thampi's troops were defeated by the Company's army. Velu Thampi issued a lengthy statement. In which he announced that the king had nothing to do with rebellion and that he alone was responsible for what had happened. "After this, Velu Thampi fled to a temple called Mannadi. With the men of the East India Company chasing him, this brave man knew that he would now be caught. He ended his own life with a knife. The whites, burning with vengeance, hanged the dead body of this great patriot.

Velu Thampi was a great patriot and fearless warrior. The last wish of this brave man was that the sword should never fall into the hands of the British. This last wish was fulfilled. Former President late Rajendraprasad received this sword from a very old resident of the Kilmanor Rajmahal and today the sword is preserved as a national souvenir in the National Museum at Delhi. This sword will undoubtedly continue to inspire and empower future generations of Indians to fight against all forms of inequality and injustice.
