Tourism project threatens the remains in Mexico cave

A prehistoric human skeleton has been found in a cave system that was flooded at the end of the last ice age 8,000 years ago, according to a cave-diving archaeologist on Mexico's Caribbean coast

OVER 8K
YEAR OLD SKULL

Given the distance from the cave entrance, the skeleton couldn't have gotten there without modern diving equipment, so it must be over 8,000 years old, archaeologist Octavio Del Rio said, referring to era when rising sea levels flooded caves

8 METRE
UNDERWATER

"There it is. We don't know if the body was deposited there or if that was where this person died," said Del Rio. He said that the skeleton was located about 8 metre underwater, about a half-kilometre into the cave system

CAVES THREATENED BY TOURISM PROJECT

Some of the oldest human remains in North America have been discovered in the sinkhole caves known as "cenotes" on the country's Caribbean coast, and experts say some of those caves are threatened by the Mexican government's Maya Train tourism project

FINDING THE SHATTERED SKULL

Octavio Del Rio said he and fellow diver Peter Broger saw the shattered skull and skeleton partly covered by sediment in a cave near where the Mexican government plans to build a high-speed tourist train through the jungle

INVESTIGATING THE SITE

Del Rio said Tuesday that institute archaeologist Carmen Rojas told him that the site was registered and would be investigated by the institute's Quintana Roo state branch Holocene Archaeology Project

In this photo of Peter Broger, aquatic archaeologist Octavio del Rio films a pre-historic human skeleton partly covered by sediment in an underwater cave in Tulum

NOTIFYING THE INSTITUTE

Del Rio, who has worked with the National Institute of Anthropology and History on projects in the past, said he had notified the institute of the discovery

Google suffers setback as EU court upholds $4B fine

Disappointed with the decision, the tech giant says that Android has created more choice for everyone and supports thousands of businesses

TECH

LONDON: A top court largely rejected Google's appeal of a record European Union anti-trust fine imposed for throttling competition and reducing consumer choice through the dominance of its mobile Android operating system. It marks another win for EU regulators taking a global lead in controlling the power of big tech companies.

The European Court of Justice's General Court mostly confirmed a 2018 decision by the EU's executive Commission to slap Google with a fine of more than $3.99 billion.

"In order better to reflect the gravity and duration of the infringement," it's appropriate to give Google a fine of 4.125 billion euros, the court said. That's slightly lower than the original 4.34 billion euro penalty, with the court saying its reasoning differed "in certain respects" from the commission's.

"We are disappointed that the Court did not annul the decision in full," Google said in a statement. "Android has created more choice for everyone, not less, and supports thousands of successful businesses in Europe and around the world."

The company has previously argued that free and open-source Android has resulted in low-cost phones and driven competition with its chief rival, Apple. Android is the most popular mobile operating system, beating even Apple's iOS.

The complainants welcomed the decision as it confirmed that Google "can no longer impose its will on phone makers", said Thomas Vinje, a lawyer representing the industry group FairSearch, whose original complaint launched the case in 2013. "This shows the European Commission got it right," he added.

The fine is one of three antitrust penalties totaling over $8 billion that the European Commission slapped on Google between 2017 and 2019, putting the 27-nation bloc at the forefront of the global push to rein in tech giants.

Since then, the commission has widened its crackdown on digital giants with more antitrust investigations targeting Amazon, Apple and Facebook and sweeping new rules aimed at clamping down on firms.

ONE MORE CHANCE LEFT FOR APPEAL

The bundle contained 11 apps, including YouTube, Maps and Gmail, but the regulators focused on the three that had the biggest market share. These include Google Search, Chrome and the company's Play Store for apps. Google still has one more chance to appeal the decision but only on points of law to the EU Court of Justice, the bloc's highest court. It didn't say whether it would do so.

Health groups call for fossil fuel treaty

CLIMATE

PARIS: Around 200 health organisations and more than 1,400 health professionals on Wednesday called for governments to establish a binding international treaty on phasing out fossil fuels, which they said pose "a grave and escalating threat to human health".

A letter proposing the "fossil fuel non-proliferation treaty" said it could work similarly to the WHO's Framework Convention on Tobacco Control—except this time the harmful controlled substances would be coal, oil and gas.

The WHO was among the health organisations from around the world who signed the letter. "The modern addiction to fossil fuels is not just an act of environmental vandalism. From the health perspective, it is an act of self-sabotage," WHO chief Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus said.

The letter called on national governments to develop and implement a legally binding mechanism that would immediately stop all future fossil fuel expansion, as well as phasing out existing production.

It emphasised that the transition should be carried out in "a fair and equitable manner," and that high-income countries should support lower-income nations to ensure the change "reduces poverty rather than exacerbating it".

The letter also pointed to the heightened health risks faced by the workers who extract, refine, transport and distribute fossil fuels and related products.

DR Congo fishers pin hopes on tourism as stocks dwindle

CULTURE

KISANGANI: Fishermen perch precariously on wooden scaffolds stretching over turbulent rapids in northeastern Democratic Republic Congo, hauling up wicker baskets in the hope of catching tilapia or a Nile perch—a time-honoured practice now threatened by overfishing.

Basket fishing was once the lifeblood of the Wagenya community, feeding them handsomely on a section of the mighty Congo River close to Kisangani, a city in Tshopo province. But fish numbers have dwindled in recent years and the fishermen see little help from the government.

Many people, like 16-year-old student Kalimo, get by selling handcrafted dioramas of traditional Wagenya life to the few tourists who visit the impoverished area.

"It helps me to pay for school," said the teenager, who was selling wooden models of small stick men holding large fish, for $10. Kalimo, whose father is a fisherman, wants to become an engineer. On top of the problems with fish, the Wagenya—split between three main clans and five sub-clans are bickering among themselves. The position of traditional chief, who serves as an intermediary between the community and the government, is unfilled because of factional infighting. Augustin Tangausi, a fisherman pointed to what he calls the 'small fishery' by the rapids, which are known as the Wagenya Falls.

Wooden poles are wedged into holes in the rocks and tied together with lianas to form scaffolds. Baskets are then dropped from the scaffolding into the roaring currents to trap fish. "There were installations everywhere before," says Tangausi. "But now there are hardly any".

The government once subsidised maintenance of the elaborate scaffolds, he said, but stopped doing so over a decade ago.
