

A regional turf

The maximalist dream of the so-called INDIA alliance, involving the complete seat coordination of all parties opposed to the Bharatiya Janata Party, was never likely to be a reality in West Bengal. In this state, where the BJP has traditionally never had much of a foothold, it was always impossible to conceive of any electoral alliance that involved the ruling All India Trinamul Congress and its age-old adversary, the Communist Party of India (Marxist). Even so, the beleaguered liberal ecosystem centred on the national capital had always hoped that an understanding of sorts involving Rahul Gandhi, M.K. Stalin in Tamil Nadu and Mamata Banerjee would have a symbolic importance in a general election in which Prime Minister Narendra Modi is threatening to run away with all the prizes. Last Sunday, at yet one more of those stupendously large public meetings for which West Bengal is famous, the mercurial AITC supremo snuffed the life out of the INDIA alliance in a very dramatic way. She announced the names of AITC candidates from all the 42 Lok Sabha seats of West Bengal, including the two seats held by the Congress. On its part, the Congress uttered a feeble protest against Mamata Banerjee's 'unilateral' declaration but it could not conceal the fact that the oh-so-clever alliance, whose naamkaran was said to be the handiwork of the Bengali poet-politician, was now dead, publicly strangled before lakhs of witnesses in Calcutta. Whether the oozing self-confidence of the chief minister and her nephew is warranted will be known once the results of the election are out. However, judging from the speeches of the Banerjee duo at the meeting, some conclusions are warranted. First, in resurrecting her 2021 assembly poll plank of being the party of Bengal against outsiders, the AITC made it sufficiently clear that it was fighting the general election to hold on to a regional space. Secondly, the AITC's shrill insistence that the Modi government at the Centre had short-changed West Bengal in welfare payments was at one with the protest politics that had been a feature of Left politics in the state from 1977 to 2011. Mamata Banerjee's indictment of a venal imperial power in Delhi was a melodramatic carbon copy of the gripes associated with Jyoti Basu and past generations of venerable bhadralok Marxists. Decoding the speeches of the AITC top guns is no rocket science. The underlying assertion that the mantle of Swami Vivekananda, Ishwar Chandra Vidyasagar, Raja Rammohan Roy and Rabindranath Tagore had fallen on the Banerjee family of Kalighat could well be inspirational. It could also bolster the younger Banerjee's claim that each of the 42 AITC candidates represent Bengal, no less. However, since the electoral battle ahead is for the control of the Government of India in its entirety, it can safely be assumed that Mamata Banerjee has quite pragmatically concluded that her battle is for a small share of the Opposition space.

India's thrust into Indo-Pacific islands goes far beyond

Mauritius, there is mutual interest in strengthening security and the strategic significance of the partnerships underscored by India's defence-related activities on Agalega Islands. Developing infrastructure on these islands allows India to project power further into the Indian Ocean and serves as a symbol of India's intent to become a more significant maritime security provider. India has cultivated close ties with Mauritius based on historical connections and the presence of a significant Indian diaspora on the island. This relationship has seen substantial progress in the defence realm through regular naval exercises, training programmes, and the establishment of key infrastructure projects. India has already put in place a Coast Guard radar and surveillance network to enhance the Mauritius maritime domain awareness. This project serves the dual purpose of boosting Mauritius defence capabilities and providing India with greater strategic visibility in the Western Indian Ocean. When you have an ambitious forward strategy at play, there are bound to be drawbacks. Maldives is an example. In the trajectory of India's island strategy, Maldives has been a nose dive. Traditionally, India enjoyed extensive influence in the Maldives on the back of a generous cheque-book and a robust military presence. However, the Muslim majority nation has politics of its own and India has been shown the door more or less. The change of government in the island nation saw increased Chinese outreach and investment, significantly eroding India's influence. While India has made attempts to revive its relationship with the Maldives, events surrounding Chinese presence there have served as a reminder of the vulnerabilities inherent in India's island engagement. India has shown the carrot to its island partners it's important to use the stick for Male. Not doing so will set a wrong precedence. India is the Maldives' closest major supplier. Food staples like rice and wheat, essential medicines, and even fuel for power generation come primarily from India. The proximity and established trade routes make India a natural choice. Additionally, India provides medical evacuations and training for Maldivian personnel. It's time to stop the supplies. Geography matters and Chinese supplies will cost at least twice over and will not be on generous terms. India needs to let Maldives know that there are costs to empty bluster.

At the same time, it needs to suppress Maldives, India is doing well to bypass it. Mauritius is just one example. India is working with partners of the Quad where it has refuelling arrangements but the most important island outreach is with France. Here France's blood-stained colonial past is an asset for India. France rings the Indo pacific with colonial possessions and deep legacy relationships as far flung as Seychelles, Madagascar, and Comoros the Reunion islands — and many others. Force de Frappe is riding the surfs with India's island entente.

From Mauritius to Fiji a liquid Indian footprint is entering a brave new age. However, for that to be sustained India has to spend more on defence, at least three percent of the GDP so that it has money to back its overseas commitments. As things stand, it is a bit of a stretch for the Indian armed forces to guard India. The new role takes it way beyond the littoral.

How is Russia-Ukraine war becoming a frozen conflict forever

a position of strength. After the capture of Bakhmut and the creation of the Surovkin Line, they spent 2023 consolidating their positions. Coupled with improvements in shortening the time between target detection and the carrying out of battlefield strikes, the Ukrainians faced an adversary in 2023 that was very different from the one it faced in 2022. To overcome this evolved enemy, Ukraine was forced to adapt its tactics, technology, and operations, in part by sending some troops to Poland and other European countries for additional combined arms training before the counteroffensive began. But Kyiv's efforts were still insufficient for the task of retaking more of the South.

This year, the Russians have met with success by capturing Avdiivka. The now-destroyed city carved a bulge in the front line that undermined critical Russian logistical operations. It sits only a few miles from the city of Donetsk, which Russia has occupied since 2014. Its fall allows the Russian military to move troops and equipment more efficiently as it presses in other directions. There is another chink that has been exposed with the removal of General Zaluzhny, which was the differences regarding the new conscription law that would increase the size of the military. He had proposed mobilising close to 500,000 troops, a figure President Zelensky viewed as impractical given the scarcity of uniforms, guns, and training facilities and the potential challenges related to recruitment. President Zelensky said publicly that Ukraine lacks the funds to pay so many new conscripts. General Zaluzhny countered that Ukraine is already short of forces because of mounting casualties and needs to match the 400,000 new soldiers that Russia plans to mobilise.

As the war in Ukraine is entering its third year, few observers would have imagined that it would still be raging. After the dramatic swings in territorial control during 2022, when the Ukrainian military managed to recapture parts of the Kharkiv region and the city of Kherson, the war settled into a positional and attritional grind in 2023, with both the tempo of operations and the intensity reducing.

The Ukrainian counteroffensive failed to deliver substantial territorial gains. The momentum generated by Ukraine's success in the first year of the conflict has given way to a sense that, despite ongoing fighting, the frontline is not moving and the risk of a forever frozen conflict is growing. The US is wrangling over funding, and although most European leaders remain firm in their support for Kyiv, it is becoming increasingly difficult for them to maintain that same level of support among their public. Cost-of-living concerns are leading many Europeans to question the sustainability of continued funding for Ukraine, and the outbreak of war in the Gaza Strip has divided the West's attention. The Ukraine War has upended many of the theories of war, including the one that modern wars will be short and swift. Why is this war dragging on? The fact is that war is the worst way to settle political differences. As the costs of fighting become apparent, adversaries usually look for an agreement to end the conflict.

Many wars, of course, do last longer. There are many reasons why compromises fail to take place. These could range from public opinion against a compromise to leaders thinking that a defeat or the end of a conflict could threaten their own position, particularly when there is a lack of understanding between one's own strength and that of the enemy, as articulated by Sun Tzu many centuries ago, leading to underestimating the damaging consequences of the conflict and when there is a fear of an existential threat.

This manifests itself with Russia being uncomfortable with NATO at their doorstep and Ukraine fearing the loss of their sovereignty. All these factors have kept the war going.

Of course, the above reasons are rooted in a situation where there is not a clash of ideologies such as communism versus capitalism, autocracies versus liberal democracies, or on religious grounds. Peace is impossible if ideological barriers prevent negotiations. Such values and ideas will continue to play a leading role in the wars waged in the future.

The West has grown more rights-based over time, resulting in its defending certain liberal principles, whatever the consequences. Compared with last year, Ukraine faces two challenges. Militarily, it has been pushed due to the failure of its counter-offensive and by the sheer force of troops in Russia's favour. A Ukrainian victory will require strategic endurance and vision, as well as the ability to sustain losses.

Apart from this, the West—and particularly the US—has struggled to provide the military aid Ukraine needs to sustain the fight. Ukraine can't turn the military tide without more Western military aid, but it has struggled to get more military aid unless it can demonstrate that it can win on the battlefield.

The two key challenges are obvious. The first is how to get more weapons to Ukraine. The second is how Europeans can defend themselves without US backing. Russia, on the other hand, is now operating from
